

CSS Introduction

“Task story”

You have been assigned to develop the visuals for a webpage about John Martin, the painter. Another team-member has already created the HTML structure for you. So you just gotta finish it up with some pretty visuals before it get sent to the boss for approval”

Actual task text:

To help you practice CSS, you can use this premade webpage and just focus on the CSS. Included in the zipfile you will find screenshots of a “finished” and intentionally ugly page to recreate.

There are two options. You can chose between the beginners or intermediate versions. In the beginners version you will find the selectors already written in, and you only need to figure out the correct properties. If you want more of a challenge, in the intermediate version the entire stylesheet is empty, and you have to analyze the HTML file to find the correct selectors and classes. It is recommended to also look at and analyze the HTML if you choose to go for the beginners version.

For an extra challenge, after recreating the webpage. You can attempt to make it look decent.
